

Co-production: from theory to Practice

Lucie Stephens

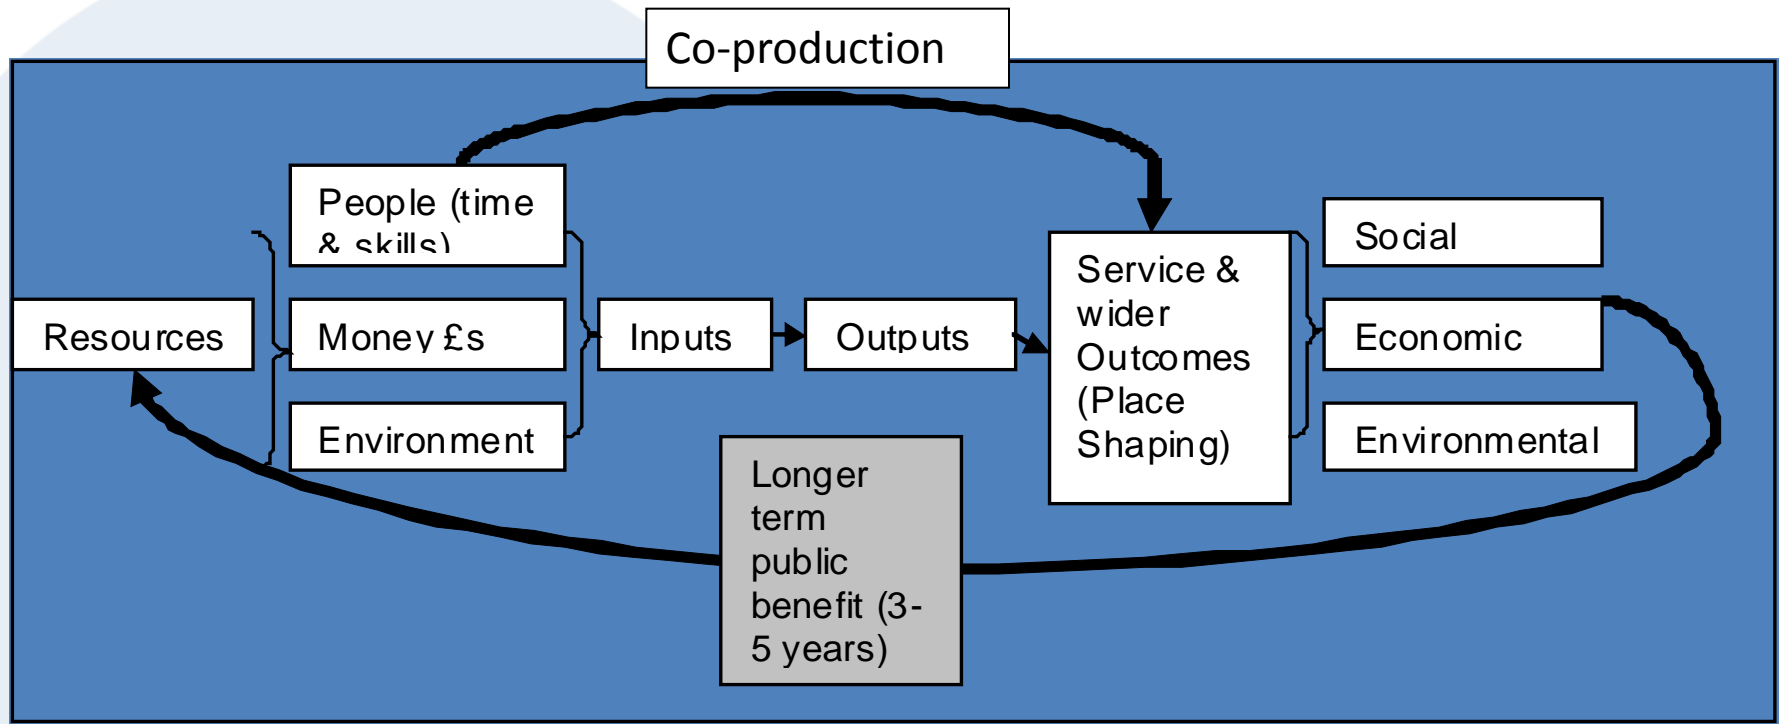

nef (the new economics foundation)

About nef

- Independent ‘think and do’ tank pursuing economics as if people and the planet mattered
- Work alongside practitioners to promote innovative solutions
- Developed a range of practical tools and publications
- Unique approach to measuring what matters

Valuing services differently

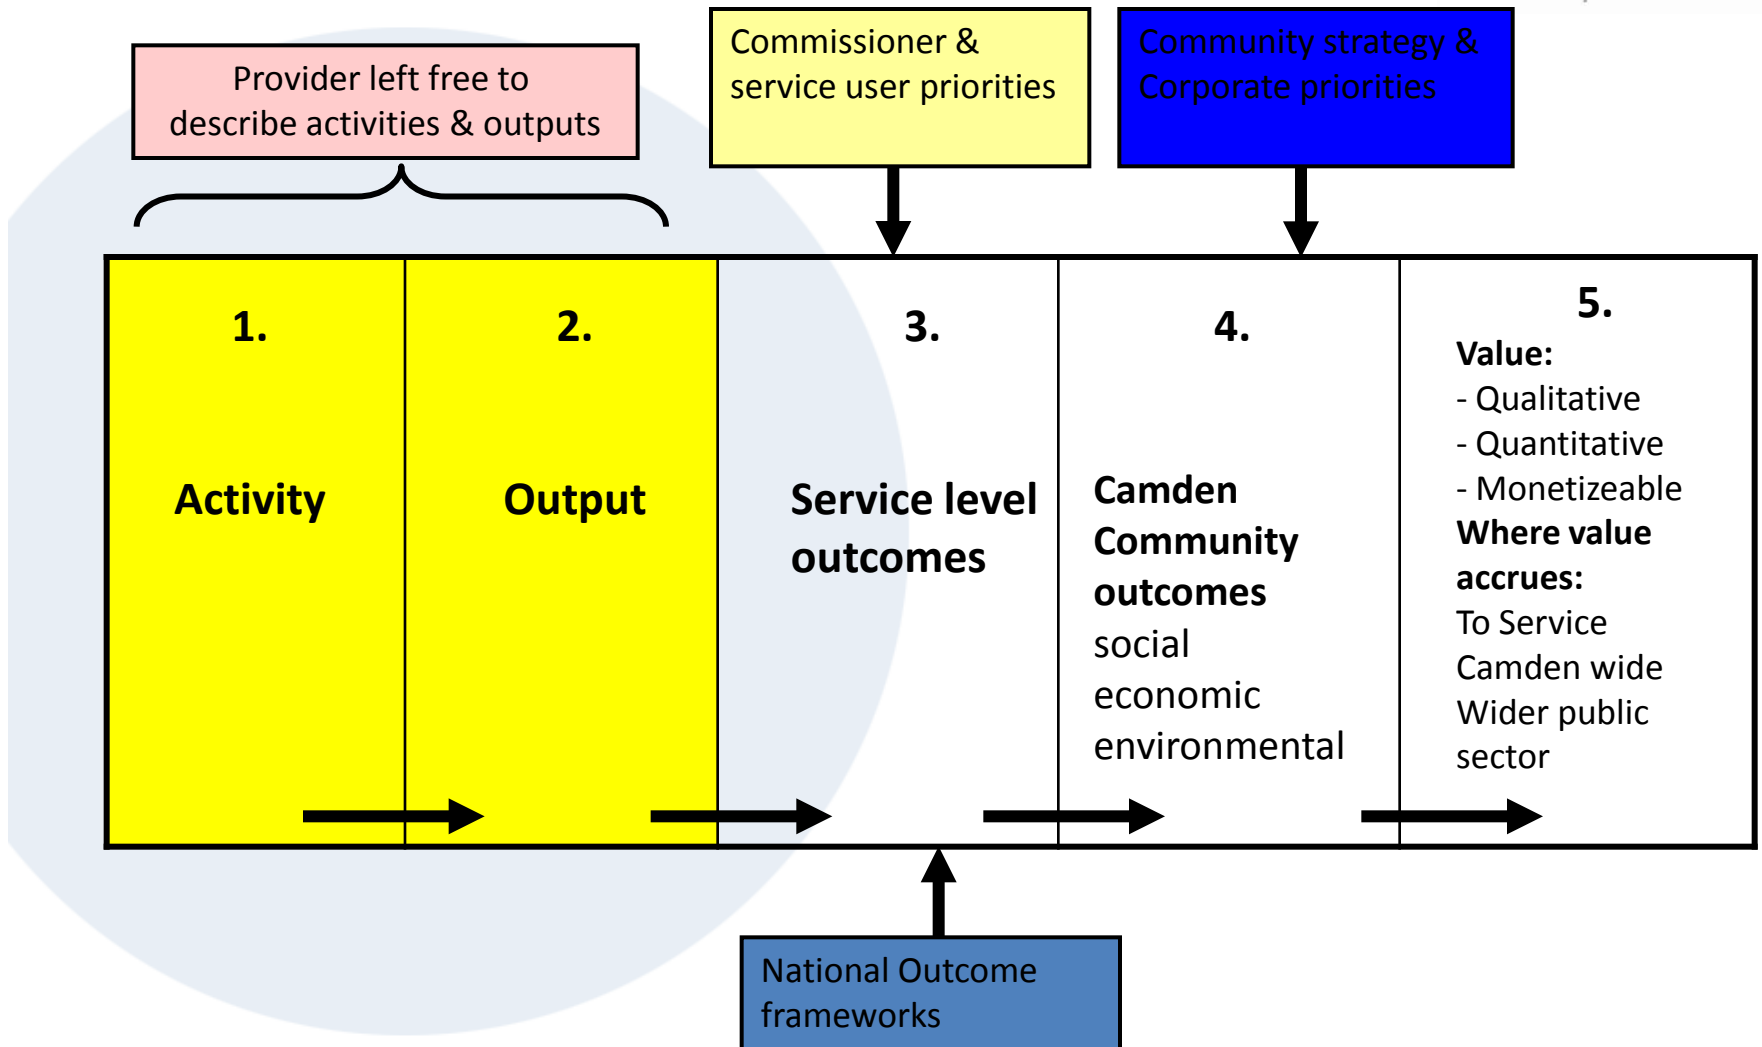

Sustainable Commissioning

economics as if people and the planet mattered

- Focuses on the ‘value’ of public spending
- Focuses services on outcomes not outputs
- Links service level outcomes to wider social, economic and environmental outcomes
- Levels the playing field for smaller providers
- Embeds co-production within services
- Creates opportunities for co-operation and innovation

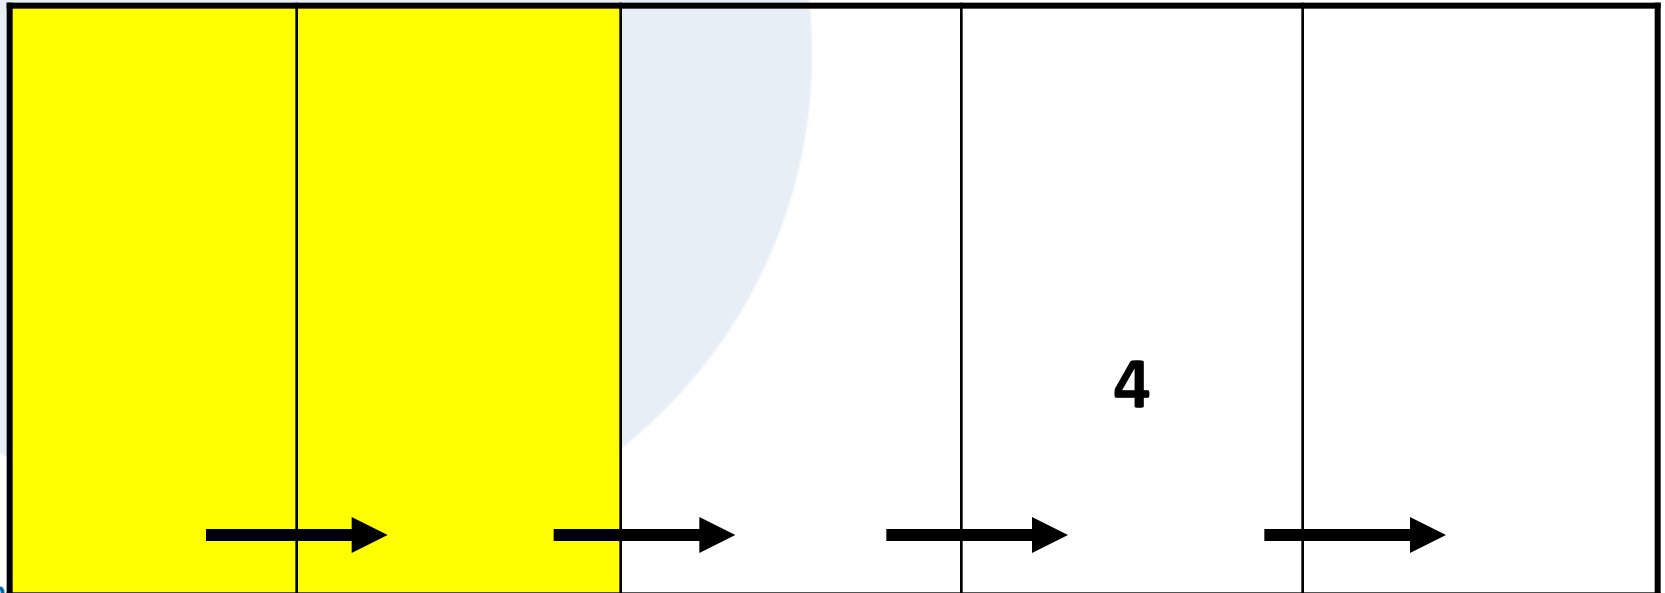

Commissioning Co-production

4. Camden Community Outcomes

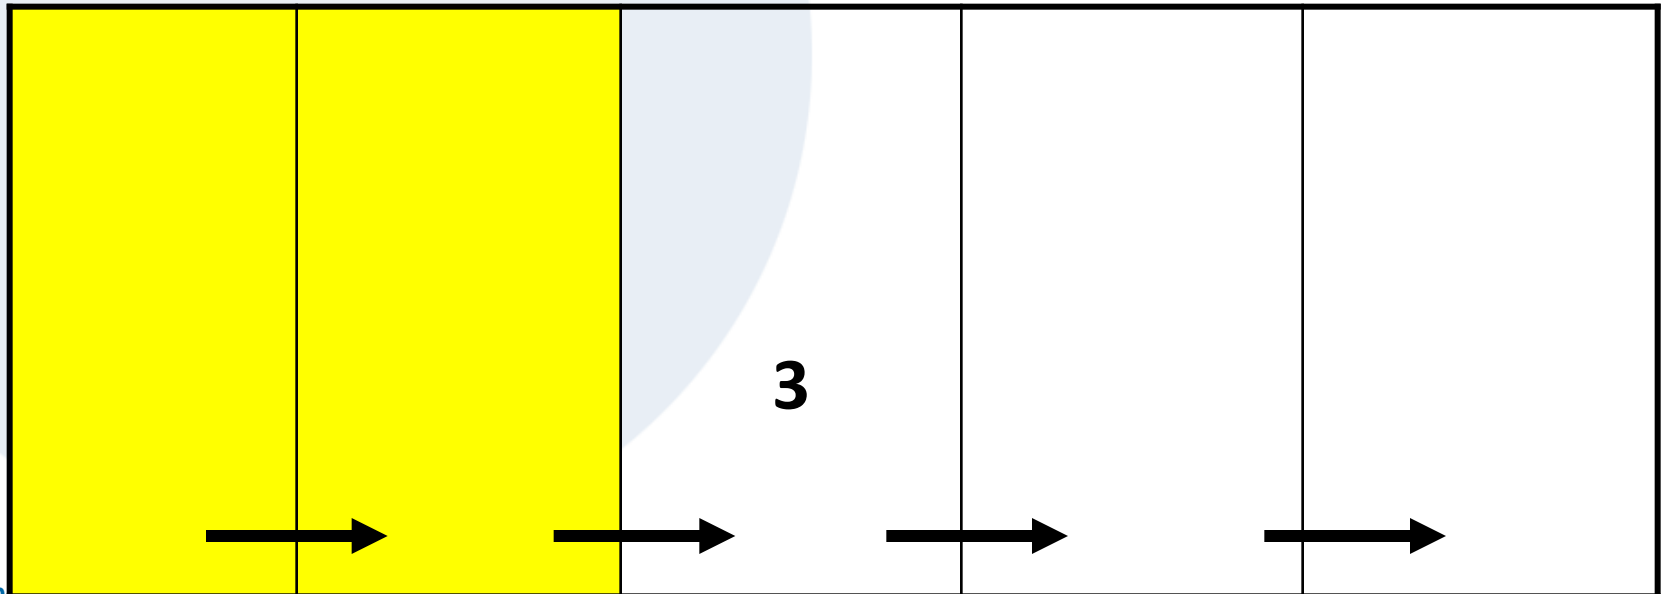

- a strong Camden economy
- a connected Camden community
- a sustainable Camden

3. Service Level Outcomes

- Improved physiological well-being
- Improved physical well-being
- Reduced stigma and discrimination
- Increased community participation
- Increased social networks

Creating the conditions

- What role would you envisage for service users' in the development and delivery of your service?
- How does your service identify and mobilise service users strengths?
- How would the contribution of service users, carers, family, peer group, neighbours and the wider community be measured or rewarded?